JOHN SHAW NEILSON (1872-1942)

Information for Art Prize entrants

BACKGROUND

Neilson was born on February 22nd, 1872, in a slab hut owned by his parents, John and Margaret (nee McKinnon), out on Racecourse Road, Penola. He was the first of six children.

He spent the first nine years of his life in Penola, during which time he came to know well the surrounding countryside with its swamps, trees and abundant bird life.

He attended the school in Robe Street (now Riddoch Street) for about fifteen months, from 1880 until his parents moved in 1881 to the block they'd selected at Minimay. In 1885, he briefly resumed his formal education, but left at the age of fourteen to work full-time with his father.

From then until 1928, when he moved to Melbourne to work in the office of the Country Road Board, his life was one of unremitting physical toil, personal sorrow, and economic hardship. Family farms in the Wimmera and Mallee districts of Victoria, were unproductive because of rabbits or mice or drought or fire. Consequently from 1916, Neilson worked as an itinerant labourer until he moved to Melbourne in 1928.

Despite these difficulties, Neilson produced the poetry on which his reputation as one of Australia's most original and important lyric poets, is based. Three collections were published in his lifetime.

Neilson died in Melbourne, in 1942.

SUBJECTS

Neilson was widely read and well-informed. As is evident from his poetry, autobiography, notebooks and letters, he was an intelligent, perceptive, sensitive, compassionate man. He also had a keen sense of humour. He was influenced by his Scottish heritage and by the strict Presbyterian upbringing of his early years.

He wrote about the natural world, particularly birds, and about people of all ages, creeds and social circumstances. He wrote about life and death; joy and sorrow; innocence and experience and love.
